Mono Lake Northern Paiute has a number of morphemes that express tense, aspect, mood. In this talk, I provide a preliminary description of these morphemes and compare their uses in elicitation and in texts. In elicitation contexts, marking of TAM is frequent and often functions to indicate tense (possibly due to influence from English). In more naturally occurring speech, however, TAM marking is infrequent and rarely has a temporal function.